WITH THE IMMORTALS.

Assembling of Great Crowds Within the Cathedral to Witness the Last Sad Rites.

How All That Was Mortal of the Illustrious Prelate Was Laid Away
---An Imposing Scene.

An Eloquent Funeral Sermon by Bishop Gibbons—“His Death Has Brought Sorrow to the Universal Church.”

THE NIGHT WATCH.

NEW YORK, Oct. 12.—The night watch of thirteen members of the society of St. Vincent de Paul, who guarded the body of Cardinal McCloskey in the great cathedral last evening, at length came to an end. The first beams of the morning sun had hardly gilded the steeples of the churches when a procession of priests with uncovered heads entered the cathedral and knelt before the altar. The priests for the opening of the new day, the day upon which the body of America's first cardinal was to be committed to the earth, were said, and then the priests walked slowly down the central aisle on either side of the catafalque, and returned to the sacristy.

THE HUNDRED PREACHERS kept the great crowd that had assembled shortly after 8 a.m. in order. The doors of the cathedral were opened at 8:45, and the waiting throng was invited to enter. As the hour for beginning services was reached the crush outside the church became greater. The streets for several squares in every direction were blocked with carriages and masses of people. The police had all they could do to preserve order. The scene within was grand and impressive. The dead body of the cardinal had during the night been placed in the mahogany coffin which had been prepared for its reception. Heavy drapes of velvet, bordered with fringe, hung about the coffin. Rods of gold extending the entire length of the coffin ornamented the sides. The body had been so placed that the head of the dead was raised above the level of the coffin, and was easily seen from below. The pews and aisles were now crowded with people, and 5,000 people were gathered within the walls of the cathedral before 10 o'clock. While the throng was waiting the opening of

THE SOLEMN REQUIEM SERVICES, the Papal Zouaves, in gold lace and bright uniforms, marched down the center aisle and took up their positions about the catafalque. A moment later the doors of the sacristy were flung open and a long procession of white-robed priests filed down the steps to the seats directly in front of the high altar. There was a moment of hushed expectancy, as Father Lamont waved his hand and the stillness was broken by the priests as they chanted the office of the dead. The 200 voices of the priests and boys sounded sweetly to the ears of the waiting congregation. The boys chanted one line of the psalm and the priests the second, then came the singing of psalm ninety-four. It was not, however, until the priests

CAME TO THE MISERICORDIA that the full richness and beauty of the well-trained voices of the chancel choir were brought out. In all probability nothing like the singing of these priests and boys has ever been heard in the city. First came the singing of the Latin mass, by the boy choristers, to which responded the harmonious voices of the priests. The notes of the chanters floated upward among the great arches of the cathedral, and being reflected by the pillars, were thrown backward and forward until they died away in the distance. Several more psalms were sung by the choir in unison, after which came the chanting of the bone-dicta. While the office for the dead was being chanted, Father Anacletus, a Franciscan friar, assisted by the Rev. Father Kelley, passed around the cathedral swinging a censer from which

PERFUME INSENSE AROSE.

Later on Father Filly, a Dominican priest, performed the same office. When the chanting came to an end the priests resumed their seats and a short period of waiting followed. The great organ pealed forth the solemn stately voluntary preceding the mass, and now two acolytes bearing lighted candles in their hands, followed by another procession of priests, came slowly out from the sacristy and bowed before the high altar.

THEN CAME THE MISERICORDIA in their somber-lined garments, and amidst the incense-smoke and the arched bays. Then when all was ready, the choir chanted the requiem mass. The choir numbered over one hundred voices. Archbishop Corrigan was the celebrant of the pontifical mass. Monsignor Farley was the assistant. Father Domelly, deacon, and Father McGivney, sub-deacon. Fathers McDonnell, Kelley, Lavalle, Oakley and McInerny of the cathedral household were the masters of ceremonies. The Reverends Charles Cotton and Thomas J. McCloskey and Fathers Ayward and McCloskey acted as chaplains.

THE SERMON.

The sermon was preached after the mass by Archbishop Gibbons of Baltimore. The text of the sermon was Ecclesiasticus. Said the speaker:

These words, spoken originally of Abel, may fittingly apply to the great high priest whose mortal remains lie before you. He also was chosen out of all men living, so all the highest and holiest portion of his life he gave to God, and gave it to Israel in his law.

The glorious ornaments of a pontiff, in which the saint is so reverend, had a two-fold significance. They symbolized in the eyes of the people the spiritual and temporal authority to the pontiff himself, which he represented thus.

THE CATHEDRAL OF ST. VINCENT DE PAUL.

He was indeed a man of great sanctity, whose mortal remains lie before you. His life was a sacrifice to God, and he gave it to Israel in his law.
